THERE are set of people who employ their time in scandalous inventions, prejudicial to the innocent, by putting false constructions on their behaviour which makes them odious to the world without any actual offence: This is generally practis'd on strangers, and the poor who are destitute of means to support or vindicate themselves from their more powerful accusers, and thereby are depriv'd of an honest livelyhood, and incur their friends displeasure by the representations of uncharitable mortals, which is a grievous and miserable addition to the distress'd.

How much more worse than brutes are those who profess the name of Christians, and practise what is more barbarous than many Heathens, by injuring those who never did them any wrong, and looking on all beneath them in the gifts of fortune with so much contempt, that they think it no matter how they are us'd; they make it part of their recreation to set others by the ears, and to expose every little weakness of their fellow creatures with aggravating circumstances. It is in this present age generally observ'd, that distrest'd Virtue is less esteem'd than successful Vice. To be depriv'd of the goods of fortune, there is a possibility of restitution; but what relief or recompence can be given to them who are unjustly rob'd of their good name, and whose worldly support depends on that valuable jewel? It is justly remark'd that those, whose lives are stained with the most criminal actions, are most busy to wrong others, and strive to make 'em appear as dark as themselves, to which base intent no innocent person is free from calumny.

The Author of the following Letter seems to have suffer'd by Aspersions, and lost a Friendship more valuable to him than any earthly consideration: All persons therefore whose conscience at the perusal condemns guilty, are desired in his behalf for the future to reform, and lay their hands on their mouths, otherwise he designs to have all their faults expos'd to the publick, having to that intent borrow'd Ithuriel's spear, which will discover their true form, and make 'em appear what they really are.

To the inexorable Astrea.

MADAM,

SInce you refuse me the privilege which to every criminal is granted, by obtaining leave to plead their own vindication, and that you will not permit my letters an acceptance; I am obliged by this publick address to cause you (however unwilling) to hear the submission of an unfortunate friend. Had I lost your favour by any real guilt of mine, or any design'd injury to you or yours, I should not dare hope for pardon. All my actions are mis-interpreted, and represented odious by wrong appearances, and I am thereby depriv'd of a friendship which I shall regret to the last moments of my life.

If it is possible for the virtuous Astrea to see the naked mind, she would not find me as represented: the imagin'd [illegible] venderous in that breast which [illegible]. Let me beg, if you have not [illegible] all matter of compassion to me; let my sincere intentions vindicate the [illegible] of a dying friendship: And as you hope to have your own errors granted, and your greatest wishes, be a suffering wretch find [illegible] with favourable attempts.

Your anger notwithſtanding ſhall never provoke me to wrong your juſtice, acknowledging I deſerve your diſpleaſure in ſome reſpects; you have ſomething ſo noble beyond many of your Sex, that I cannot eaſily bear the frowns of ſo valuable a friend, and no humility ſhall be wanting to remove that obdurate diſpoſition you ſeem to poſſeſs; my conſtancy and ſubmiſſion may plead a compaſſion, which I am ſenſible you can have for every one except the unfortunate

ATRAM.

Compaſſion proper to our Sex appears,
Which nature witneſs'd when ſhe lent us tears,
Of tender Sentiments we only give
Thoſe proofs: to weep is our prerogative,
To ſhew with pitying looks and melting eyes,
How with a ſuffering friend we ſympathize.
Who can all ſenſe of others ills eſcape
Is but a brute, at beſt, in human ſhape:
For natural pity did at firſt refine
Our wit, and raiſe our thoughts to things divine;
This proves our ſpirit of a God's deſcent,
While that of beaſts is prone and downwards bent:
To them but earth-born life God did diſpenſe;
To us, for mutual aid, celeſtial ſenſe.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Cracow, Dec. 28. N.S. Yeſterday Proclamation was made here with the Sound of Trumpets and Kettle-Drums, that the Coronation of his Majeſty our moſt gracious Sovereign Lord Auguſtus III. was fixed for the 17th of January of the approaching Year 1734. Since the Arrival of the Saxons, all has been very quiet here; and the Caſtle is fitting up in all haſte for the King's Reſidence.

Madrid Dec. 29. M. de Teuil having terminated his Nogociations at this Court, is preparing to return to Paris, and in conſequence of what has been regulated with him, all poſſible Preparations are making in this Kingdom, to puſh on the War with vigour; Orders having been already given for enliſting every fifth Man in all the Provinces of the Kingdom, in order to recruit and augment the Troops of his Majeſty, and Orders are ſent to all the Ports of the Mediterranean, in order to make the neceſſary preparations for a new Tranſportation of Troops.

Turin Jan. 9, N.S. We have an Account that Novarra is taken; ſo that there remains unconquered in the Milaneze only Tortona.

Paris, Jan. 11. We foreſee the main puſh for next Campaign will be on the Rhine, 'tis reſolv'd therefore to have at leaſt 150,000 Men in thoſe parts. We ſhall have 100,000 Men beſides in Italy, including the Troops of Spain and Sardinia.

From Leghorn we have received an Account, that the Spaniſh Troops had ſettled their Head-Quarters at Piſa, where they have plenty of all ſorts of proviſions: That the Marquis de Caſtropignano being arrived before the Fortreſs of Aula, whither all the Germans who were left at Maſſa and at Laverſa, had retired, he immediately ſummoned the Garriſon to ſurrender, which they refuſed: Whereupon he ordered the place to be attacked in Form; and after a few days Siege, the Garriſon demanded to capitulate, but the Spaniſh Commander would grant them no other Terms than to ſurrender at Diſcretion, which they were obliged to accept. They were made to lay down their Arms, and were conducted to the Port of Spezie, there to be ſhipped for Spain, whence it is believed they will be tranſported to Oran. As ſoon as the reſt of the Horſe, who are at Antibes, are arrived in Italy, the Spaniſh Army is to begin their March thro' the Pope's Territories to Naples, in order to attempt the Conqueſt of that Kingdom.

Hague Jan. 8. The States General, who re-aſſembled the Day before Yeſterday, have ſettled ſeveral Affairs of Importance, and among them the State of the War for 1734. The Count de Uleſelt, Miniſter of the Emperor has received ſeveral Couriers with diſpatches of Importance relating to the project of Accommodation, which 'tis ſaid will be ſet on foot in a few Days. This Negotiation is, as we are inform'd, to be carried on at the Hague between the Ambaſſadors Mediators of Great Britain and this State.

Letters from Vienna import, that the Imperial troops, to the number of 12,000, began yeſterday their March from the Borders of Hungary towards Italy; aud 'tis aſſured they are to be followed by a far greater number; 'tis aſſured alſo, that his Majeſty's Forces on the Rhine would in a little time be able to make head againſt the French troops, who had poſted ſeveral thouſand Men on the Frontiers of the Rhine, to repulſe the Imperial Troops, ſhould they attempt to croſs.
